WASHINGTON SENTINEL.

DAILY.

NO. 68.

CITY OF WASHINGTON, TUESDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 13, 1853.

The Sons of Great Fathers.—There are very few of the great men in English literature who have any descendants. As a general rule, a great man is the last of his immediate line. He makes his name famous and then bequeaths it to nobody. It seems to be too much glory for a family to be able to connect itself lineally with any one of those masterspirits in the world of mind that have conferred glory on a nation. Were there a descendant of Shakspeare alive, he would be curiously inspected by many admirers of the great bard, in order to ascertain whether there were not some marks about him which distinguished him from other men. But it so happens that nature seemes inimical to the propagation of great names, although it sometimes occurs that a great man has a family of children who survive him and who multiply and spread his name. But generally the children of great men are short-lived and the family dies out in the course of a generation or two.

What have become of the names of the

VOL. 1.

What have become of the names of the greatest of Englishmen? Of our twelve Presidents who have been elected to that office but three or four have left any descendants, and what is true of our Presidents in this respect is also true of our most distinguished men in other departments of life. Where are the de-scendants of Shakspeare and Ben Johnson? Shakspeare had children, but the family is long since extinct. So also had Milton children, since extinct. So also had Milton children, but his name has long ceased to belong to the living. We have no Drydens, no Popes, nor Addisons, nor Swifts, nor Bolingbrokes, nor Johnsons, nor Gibbonses, nor Burkes, nor Reynoldses, not to mention a hundred other names of distinction in science, art, literature, statesmanship, and war. Their offspring are of the brain and live upon the shelves of libraries and in the hearts of the lovers of genius and of song.

A recent writer from Germany speaks of the son of Schiller, the greatest of the German poets, who is still living. Of course he is an object of curiosity, as all who love the father on account of the beauty and brilliancy of his genius have the desire to see the son of such a man. Well they see him, and when they do see him,

Well they see him, and when they do see him they see a very ordinary man. They feel very much disappointed. We suppose that it is thought that such a man as Schiller could not have a son who would not rise far above the stature of son who would not rise far above the stature of ordinary men. Men seem to think that genius must necessarily give birth to genius, whereas the truth is that mind is not transmissible and it is mind that makes the glory of the man. They, who hunt out Schiller's son in the expectation of finding a prodigy in intellect as the father was, laugh at the son, whereas they them selves deserve to be laughed at for their folly. He is a very respectable man who acts his part He is a very respectable man who acts his part in life with propriety, and but for his connection with the great bard of Germany would be regarded in all respects as a most passable and pleasant man. But he is the son of Schiller, and people will not permit the son of Schiller, and people will not permit the son of Schiller, to be common. To accommodate their tastes, he ought to be made out of porcelain and not out of the common clay from which men and women are made. As nature, and not they, had the making of him, he came into this world undistinguished by any of the extraordinary powers of mind for which his great father is so famous. Poor fellow, it is his misfortune and the first that he is the son of great warm. not his fault that he is the son of a great man. People laugh at him because he is not a genius, and deride him because he is the son of Schiller, without the mind of Schiller. He feels keenly the disadvantage of having had a famous father, for people are continually contrasting him with that father, greatly to his disparagement. for people are continually contrasting him with that father, greatly to his disparagement. There seems to be a strong tendency in the minds of people to look for superiority in all those who spring from men of superior mind, notwithstanding the world is full of evidence going to shew that great men either have no children at all, or if they have any, such as are not distinguishable from the children of common men.

They may inherit the physical organizations and lineaments of their fathers, but genius is a gift from heaven which may not be inherited. FRANKLIN AS A BOOKSELLER.—The following story, told of Franklin's mode of treating the animal called in those days "lounger," is worth putting into practice occasionally, even in this

One fine morning, when Franklin was busy preparing his newspaper for the press, a lounger stepped into the store, and spent an hour or more looking over the books, &c., and finally, taking one in his hand, asked the shop-boy the price.

"One dollar," was the answer.
"One dollar," said the lounger, "can't you

"No, indeed, one dollar is the price."
Another hour had nearly passed, when the lounger asked, "Is Mr. Franklin at home?"
"Yes he is in the mining off." es, he is in the printing office."

"I want to see him," said the lounger. The shop boy immediately informed Mr. Franklin that a gentleman was in the store wanting to see him. Franklin was soon behind the counter, when the longer, with book in hand, addressed him thus, "Mr. Franklin, what is the lowest price you can take for this book?"
"One dollar and a quarter," was the ready

"One dollar and a quarter? Why your young man only asked a dollar.
"True," said Franklin, "and I could have better afforded to have taken a dollar then, than to have been taken out of the office." The lounger seemed surprised, and wishing to end the parley of his own making, said, "Come, Mr. Franklin, tell me what is the lowest you can take for it."

"One dollar and a half."
"One dollar and a half."
"One dollar and a half? Why you offered it yourself for a dollar and a quarter."
"Yes," said Franklin, "and I had better have taken that price, then than a dollar and a half

The lounger paid down the price, and went about his business—if he had any—and Frank-lin returned into the printing office.

SINGULAR PROPHECY.-Some one has un earthed, from O'Meara's "Voice from St. Helena," the following remarkable prophecy, said to have been uttered by Napoleon, in regard to Russia and Turkey. Taken in conjunction with the recent events, it is sufficiently curious: "In the course of a faw years," said Napoleon, "Russia will have Constantinople, the greater part of Turkey, and all Greece. This I hold to be as certain as if it had already taken place. Almost all the cajoling and flattery which Alexander practised towards me was to gain my consent to effect this object. earthed, from O'Meara's "Voice from St. Hewas to gain my consent to effect this object. I would not consent, seeing that the equilibrium of Europe would be destroyed. In the natural course of things, Turkey must fall to Russia. The greater part of her population are Greeks, who you may say are Russians.
